Dear CAA Committee Members,

I write in response to two queries posed regarding the Interdisciplinary M.A. Program in East Asian Studies operation under the new semester system.

A. On the PACER credits hours vs. those in the advising sheet, comparison sheet, and sample programs of study, the difference reflects four considerations:

1) The Pacer calculation was a straight-forward, desk-top calculation of 2/3 the quarter system requirement, which we interpreted to be the desired figure and calculation.

2) In reality, our new minimum program degree requirement is accurately reflected in the Advising Sheet minimum credit hours (CAA p. 29) and Comparison Chart (CAA p. 24), 48 hours.

3) The difference between the PACER course credit hours and the advising sheets/comparison chart is the result of two factors:
   a) The semester course credit hour system reduces hours by more than two-thirds (3/5 of quarters)
   b) A restructuring of beginning and intermediate language courses reduced credit hours needed to reach intermediate level by half or more (courses were compressed).

4) Rather than reflect the absolute minimum credit hours needed for graduation, all the sample curricula reflect more realistic assumptions regarding the language ability that students actually bring into our program, their consequent need to take courses that do not carry graduate credit, and the need to take courses that will are more than three credit hours each.

B. A second question was raised regarding what might appear as a dual standard for research work required of our students, “publishable quality” for some students, but not for others. In fact, there is no difference in rigor regarding effective use of sources, analysis, logic or methodological standards. The difference reflects students’ different abilities to access sources in an East Asian language that results from our objective: to provide a foundation for people with a serious interest in East Asia, the ability to learn an East Asian language, and East Asia related career objectives whose previous institutions did not allow them to lay an adequate intellectual and linguistic foundation for work related to regions using less commonly taught languages. More specifically:

A major aim of our program is to get students to the point where they can make use of an East Asian language in their work – government, NGO, business or academic. In important ways it is a “bridging” program, taking students with little or no background as well as students with a modest foundation, and getting them to a level where they can begin to function professionally with the language. For some purposes, primarily oral/aural skills are essential (a skill set that gets heavy weight in early East Asian language education); for research purposes, however, the ability to read is critical.
In modern East Asian languages, for example, time to research-usable reading levels is considerable. People with three years of modern Chinese, Japanese or Korean can access a limited range of modern materials for thesis research, e.g., printed statistical tables, children’s literature, or middle school texts, but not read the scholarly literature that would be necessary for most publishable quality research. Our students who come in with more than two or three years of language are able to get to a level where they can read scholarly materials and so will be prepared to do such research.

While the program pushes students to pursue language aggressively (through accelerated, intensive language courses, summer study, study abroad) and urges them toward publishable quality research, some students who enter the program can not reach a level sufficient to read academic publications. Consequently, students are directed to thesis projects in which they can exploit foreign language sources consistent with their abilities. Rigorous standards of evidence, logic and method are applied to their work, but absent surveys of the key foreign language literature, such work is usually not publishable.

Program Learning Goals

Note: these are required for all undergraduate degree programs and majors now, and will be required for all graduate and professional degree programs in 2012. Nonetheless, all programs are encouraged to complete these now.

Program Learning Goals

1. Students must demonstrate a broad knowledge of the language, society, culture and histories of China, Korea and/or Japan;
2. Students must demonstrate both a breadth and depth of knowledge in the specific area of the student's specialization;
3. Students must demonstrate a foundation in, and an ability to engage critically with, the discourse and scholarship on Chinese, Korean and/or Japanese language, society, culture and history, including theory (as appropriate);
4. At minimum, and depending on the student's specialization, students must demonstrate third-year competence in Chinese, Korean or Japanese language skills; native speakers of an EA language must demonstrate this competence in a second EA language;
5. Students must demonstrate the ability to engage in scholarship on a targeted subject and to substantiate and defend an original scholarly argument, both orally and in writing.

Assessment
Assessment plan includes student learning goals, how those goals are evaluated, and how the information collected is used to improve student learning. An assessment plan is required for undergraduate majors and degrees. Graduate and professional degree programs are encouraged to complete this now, but will not be required to do so until 2012.

Is this a degree program (undergraduate, graduate, or professional) or major proposal? Yes

Does the degree program or major have an assessment plan on file with the university Office of Academic Affairs? No

DIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that measure performance directly, are authentic and minimize mitigating or intervening factors)

Direct assessment methods specifically applicable to graduate programs

- Candidacy exams
- Thesis/dissertation oral defense and/or other oral presentation
- Thesis/dissertation (written document)

INDIRECT MEASURES (means of assessment that are related to direct measures but are steps removed from those measures)

Surveys and Interviews

- Student survey
- Alumni survey

Additional types of indirect evidence

- External program review

USE OF DATA (how the program uses or will use the evaluation data to make evidence-based improvements to the program periodically)

- Analyze and discuss trends with the unit's faculty
- Periodically confirm that current curriculum and courses are facilitating student attainment of program goals
- Benchmark against best programs in the field

Program Specializations/Sub-Plans

If you do not specify a program specialization/sub-plan it will be assumed you are submitting this program for all program specializations/sub-plans.

Pre-Major

Does this Program have a Pre-Major? No

Professor Mineharu Nakayama, Acting Director
East Asian Studies Center
318 Oxley Hall

Dear Professor Nakayama:

The Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures (DEALL) wishes to express its strong support for the proposed interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies. A serious lacunae in our East Asian Studies program has been the absence of such a degree program. Every major East Asian Studies program in the United States grants interdisciplinary graduate degrees on Asia or East Asia. These programs include Arizona State, University of Arizona, University of California at Berkeley, Irvine, Los Angeles, San Diego, Santa Barbara, University of Hawaii, Georgetown, University of Maryland, Michigan State, University of Michigan, University of Oregon, University of Texas, University of Chicago, Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, University of Illinois, Indiana University, University of Kansas, University of Minnesota, University of Pennsylvania, University of Pittsburgh, Princeton, Stanford, USC, Washington University, and Yale.

The needs these programs address are probably many and varied, but they were all created in response to a growing interest in East Asian cultures and the desires of increasing numbers of students and professionals to either supplement their academic or professional specialities with a greater understanding of how their specialities can be applied in the case of East Asia or to demonstrate their mastery of the requisites for pursuing business or research interests in East Asia. The addition of an interdisciplinary MA in East Asian Studies would be a valuable addition to OSU in that it will enhance students’ prospects for future employment and also enhance and their appreciation and knowledge of East Asian cultures. It is our belief that it will prove to be a popular program of study.

The Ohio State University provides an ideal environment for the success of such a program. First, there is a large student population with interests in East Asia. Second, there are over thirty graduate faculty with research interests in East Asia, and they are to be found in a wide variety of departments throughout the university, from agriculture to economics to the law school and Fischer School of Business. In short, the program will have available a pool of highly qualified instructors capable of meeting the educational needs of OSU's highly diversified student body. Third, the library's East Asian collection is becoming one of the stronger in the nation and will provide excellent support for the program. Fourth, the East Asian language courses at OSU have a national reputation for excellence and will prepare students in perhaps the most critical area of their training, mastering a difficult foreign language.

The curriculum and requirements proposed for the MA in East Asian Studies seem well-suited to encouraging a rigorous, critical, and comprehensive understanding of East Asia societies and cultures. DEALL is particularly impressed by the strong emphasis placed on learning East Asian languages in your proposal.

Indeed, it seems a pity that this kind of interdisciplinary degree program was not instituted before, and DEALL thanks you and your committee for your efforts. We will do everything we can to cooperate in making the program a success.

Sincerely yours,

Richard Torrance, Associate Professor of Japanese

Dear Professor Brown:

I am pleased to offer the concurrence of the College of the Arts to the proposed interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies. The College and the Department of History of Art has a long tradition in Asian Studies as is seen by our many courses related to Asian Art, the Huntington Archives, and the scholarship of faculty that includes recent publications and curated shows of Asian Art. We are particularly pleased that East Asian art expert, Professor Julia Andrews, has played an instrumental role in developing this program.

As you will see from the attached letter from Professor Myroslava Mudrak, Acting Chair of the Department of History of Art, the proposal has her concurrence as well as that of the graduate faculty. History of Art is the department in the College of the Arts that will be directly involved with the East Asian Studies program and with their endorsement it is a pleasure to support this initiative.

Sincerely,

Karen A. Bell

Dear Professor Brown:

Thank you for the opportunity to review the program development plan for an interdisciplinary M.A. degree in East Asian Studies. Having reviewed the proposal and having discussed the matter with Dean Alutto, I am pleased to offer the concurrence of the Fisher College of Business.

While giving our concurrence as a college, I offer a cautionary note. The proposal makes non-specific reference to Fisher courses that students in the program may wish to take in partial fulfillment of the East Asian Studies program. Several graduate courses in the Fisher College are largely inaccessible to students from outside the college. This is the case for MBA core courses that are offered to MBA students only and in a lock step, cohort fashion and for several MBA electives where extraordinary student demand within the college typically precludes any access from non-Fisher graduate students. Given these constraints, it may be wise for leaders of the East Asian Studies and the Fisher College graduate programs to discuss where access is likely to be problematic, and to do so before any student advising begins. Obviously, this is something that can wait until formal program approval has been received.

Sincerely,

Dear Professor Nakayama:

The History Department, through our Graduate Studies Committee, has reviewed in detail your Program Development Plan for an Interdisciplinary Masters Degree in East Asian Studies. As Graduate Studies Chair, I have also discussed the broad outlines of your proposal. Both discussions have been very positive. I have also mentioned a few of our minor suggestions to Prof. Phil Brown of our Department, who is one of the co-authors of the proposal.

On behalf of the History Department, I express in this note concurrence with your Plan and our Department’s wishes for your success in establishing this worthy interdisciplinary degree program.

Dear Dr. Brown,

The Department of Human and Community Resource Development Graduate Studies Committee has met and support the proposal for an interdisciplinary East Asian Studies M.A. degree. While we anticipate that very few of our students will be interested in such a degree, the proposal has documented the need within the university community, and discusses how the new program would be consistent with the Academic Plan.

Best wishes on the successful establishment of the new program.

Dear Professor Brown:

The Graduate Studies Committee of the Department of Anthropology has reviewed the proposal for an interdisciplinary M. A. program in East Asian Studies. The GSC’s opinion is that this program has an important role to play within the University, and one that will augment the resources available to graduate students in our department. Unfortunately, the imminent retirement of Professor Chung-Min Chen will limit the direct participation of the Department of Anthropology in the program for the immediate future. However, anthropology has an important role to play in any regional studies program, and I hope that we can look forward to making a contribution once again.

The Department of Anthropology’s Graduate Studies Committee fully supports the establishment of the interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies.

Sincerely,

Dear Dr. Brown:

The Department of Economics is pleased to offer concurrence to the proposed interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies. We are pleased to see that Economics 672 (Economic Analysis of Japanese Firms and Markets) is included in one of your model track program. Allow me to mention that we are in the process of redesigning Economics 508 (Comparative Systems) as a comparative institutional study of transitional and transforming economies with a special emphasis on the Chinese economy. I believe this course will serve your MA students as well as Economics 672. At some point of your choosing, we would appreciate having this course included in advising your student’s choice of tracks. There is no question whatsoever that the proposed M. A. program will benefit the university’s academic environment. We wish you the best in establishing and administering this program.

Dear Professor Brown,

I am writing in very strong support of the establishment of an M.A. program in East Asian studies.

As Director of Graduate Studies in Sociology, I can attest that a large number of our graduate students would be interested in participating in the program. We routinely admit many students interested in simultaneously studying sociology and East Asian studies, and I am confident that these students will benefit from the development of this program.

Moreover, my own research is in firm behavior in China, and I can attest that the proposed MA would train graduate students in the areas that would benefit them most in both academic and non-academic pursuits following graduate school. Many of the graduate students with whom I work would definitely participate.

If I can provide additional information, I hope you will contact me.

All the best,

Dear Steve:

On behalf of the faculty in History of Art, I am very pleased to grant our concurrence to the proposed interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies. I am especially delighted that our department's own specialist in the field, Professor Julia Andrews, was involved in the planning of the program from the very start. Her expertise and reputation as a scholar-teacher of high standards are evidenced in the level of academic rigor presented in the proposal. In addition to the benefits of its interdisciplinary framework—and especially the practicality of three separate tracks that would prepare students for different kinds of professional careers—the proposal builds on what is already strongly in place at the University and promises to further enhance our own program through inter-departmental contact. I am happy to join my graduate faculty in endorsing the proposal as outlined and look forward to its implementation in the very near future.

Dear J.J.,

I am pleased to write in support of the proposal for an interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies. The program makes sense from a number of perspectives, including the importance of east Asia to Ohio’s citizenry and economy. With the program’s distinguished faculty, library, and other resources there is likely to be great interest in this new M.A. The fact that the proposal imagines the program growing slowly and at little or no additional cost to East Asian Studies, etc., also makes it attractive. I wish you the best going forward with the proposal.

Dear Director Nakayama and Professor Brown,

You have requested concurrence with a proposal for establishing an interdisciplinary M.A. program in East Asian Studies.

I have consulted with the Chairs and Directors of units in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences. In general, they are supportive of the proposal. Individual units will or have contacted you regarding additional courses that could be included in the proposal (Economics, Political Science). Thus, I concur with the proposed M.A. program.

CAMPUS MAIL

Dear Professor Brown:

The appropriate faculty members in the Political Science graduate program have now reviewed the draft proposal for an interdisciplinary East Asian Studies M.A. program that would be under the aegis of the East Asian Studies Center. I am pleased to inform you that we consider the proposed program to be intellectually strong and to conform nicely with the University’s emphasis on interdisciplinary studies. Therefore, please consider this a formal letter of concurrence.

We do have a few minor comments to make, however, about the draft proposal. The first concerns some ambiguity in the language regarding Requirements II on page 4. The draft states that the student is required to “write a seminar paper of publishable quality employing the relevant East Asian language at the level of the student’s competence.” This could imply that the student is required to write a paper in Korean/Japanese/Chinese. The following page states that a student’s thesis must use sources in the East Asian language of competence. We assume that the paper, too, must employ sources in the original language and not be written in the original language. In any case, this ambiguity should be clarified.

Our second concern is about the courses listed in Sample Curriculum III on page 7. It shows a student taking an East Asia-focused political science course in all three quarters of their first year. We think it unlikely at present, given the number of East Asian specialists on our faculty, that three courses in this area will be offered within a given year. Thus, it would be better to give students more latitude in the choice or timing of courses over the two-year period. Finally, a question was raised about whether there are or will be enough courses across all programs to support a Korea concentration.
Apart from these concerns which we think ought to be addressed, let me say again that we offer you strong support in your effort to establish an interdisciplinary East Asian MA program.

Sincerely yours,

RE: Semester Conversion for the Interdisciplinary M.A. Program in East Asian Studies

The Graduate Studies Committee of the Interdisciplinary MA Program in East Asian Studies is pleased to submit the enclosed materials for semester conversion of its MA program.

Since we are not a course-offering unit, all plans for conversion of individual courses are a matter for the individual departments that offer the courses students take to fulfill the requirements for this degree. This allows the East Asian Studies program to capitalize on the changes in individual departments (such as the development of new courses for constellations in the History Department and the new offerings in film in the Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures) without the need to alter our own program.

A new program, rather than adjust our limited and broad requirements, we have made the appropriate conversion of credit hours and their distribution among language and content courses. [Comment: previous sentence is garbled; meaning unclear] The process has been handled by the Graduate Studies Committee and involves no additional requirements.

Planned as a two-year program, the sole change in the program as it transitions from quarters to semesters is in the total number of courses required for graduation (from 18 to 16). This change is accommodated via a reduction in the number of required language/language courses. Under both the quarter system and semester system, students take at least one such course each term they are enrolled. Under quarters, that meant a total of 6 courses; for semesters that becomes 4 courses. Since all language sequences at these introductory/intermediate levels have been converted by the offering departments and plans made to accommodate students during the transition, there is no need for further action on our part. The minimum level of required language achievement, Level III, does not change.

I endorse the Interdisciplinary MA Program in East Asian Studies program proposals and request approval for conversion from quarters to semesters.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

Professor and Chair
2. Transition plan for MA

Transition.

The Interdisciplinary M.A. Program in East Asian Studies will ensure that graduate students will not find their progress impeded or carry any undue burden as a result of semester conversion. Advising of students during the transition will take place individually in order to tailor the program to the needs of the individual student. Advising will be carried out by faculty and by our Graduate Studies Chair.

The following chart shows a) M.A. program elements, b) the number of courses/credit hours required under both the current quarter system and under semesters, and c) notes that provide explanation of particular program elements for additional clarity.

As this chart demonstrates, all requirements for the degree retain the same structure under both quarter and semester systems, with only a reduction in the number of language courses without changing the minimum level of language achievement required for graduation. With this one exception, only the credit hours have been adjusted to correlate with the new semester system. Since our plan introduces no structural changes to our program, pre-semester MA requirements will continue to apply to students who matriculated under quarters, and students entering under semesters will follow the same requirements.

All courses which contribute to this MA program are offered by individual disciplinary departments as part of their normal curriculum and all are reported via the individual department Semester Program Templates.

4. Program Requirements (including a sample MA plan)

1. Program Overview: Students must complete at least 16 [See above] courses. Of these, 4 must be language courses or courses that make extensive use of foreign language materials. At minimum, a student must complete through the third year of an East Asian language. With the exception of Level I and Level II language courses, no other courses counting toward graduation can be below the 500 level. 7 courses must focus on one East Asian geographic area (e.g., Korea) or an academic discipline of concentration (e.g., history). 4 courses must be from outside the concentration. All students must take 1 foundation course, Introduction to Graduate-level East Asian Studies. Within the preceding requirements, students must take 2 research-oriented courses (700+ level under quarters; 7000+ level under semesters) in which they write a substantial research paper (generally 25-35 pages) employing the student’s East Asian language at the level of the student’s competence. At least 9 courses in the program must be at the full graduate level (600+ under quarters, 6000+ under semesters).

2. All students are required, by the end of the first year of study, to choose, in consultation with their M.A. advisory committee, either a thesis or non-thesis track. Students must file the appropriate form before enrolling in the second year of study.

a. Thesis Track

If a student chooses the thesis track, he/she is expected to complete a substantial research paper (generally 40-50 pages) in which they are expected to utilize their primary East Asian language as a research tool. The student must produce a written thesis prospectus by the end of the first semester of his/her final year of study; a minimum of one-third of the student’s time over the next semester will be devoted to researching and writing of the thesis. The thesis should employ the student’s chosen East Asian language(s) at the level of the student’s competence at the time the thesis is submitted. Students with advanced language standing are expected to achieve publishable quality; students in the early stages of language acquisition are expected to produce a research paper that indicates that they have mastered the skills of research, synthesis, and analysis required for publishable scholarship.

The student is also required to take an oral defense of the thesis and fields determined by the student in consultation with the student’s committee. Thesis-track students may register for up to two semester of thesis-writing credit without special permission. A request to register for more thesis-writing course credit must be approved in writing by their committee members and the EAS Graduate Studies Committee.

b. Non-thesis Track

Students choosing the non-thesis track must complete, first, one seminar in which they utilize their primary East Asian language as a research tool and write a seminar paper (generally 25-35 pages in length) employing that language at the level of the student’s competence at the time the paper is submitted. Stud-
Students with advanced language standing are expected to produce a paper of publishable quality; students in the early stages of language acquisition are expected to produce a research paper that indicates that they have mastered the skills of research, synthesis, and analysis required for publishable scholarship. Second, students must take a comprehensive four-hour written examination in fields determined by each student in consultation with his or her M.A. advisory committee. The exam must have sufficient number and variety of questions to address the major disciplinary and content fields of the student’s coursework. In addition, the student must participate in a one-hour oral defense of the written exam with all three of his/her committee members participating. (In the case of a four-faculty-member committee, at least three must participate, but those three may not all come from the same department.) This examination and oral defense are intended to bring together the previous coursework in the student’s program rather than to address a reading list of canonical works within established disciplinary boundaries.
